Happy Thanksgiving!

Thanksgiving is one of the most colourful times of our calendar, which should make all of us colour-loving quilters happy!

There's lots of colour in our 2021/2022 workshops.

October brings us M.J. Kinman's jewel tones, November is Cheryl Arkinson's scrappy adventures, and in March, Carolina Oneto teaches us all about colour value. For quieter visual adventures, we have Brandy Maslowski's healing stitches in March, and variations on free-motion quilting from Christine Cameli in April and Robin Bogaert in May (the latter may even be in person!).

I took my first learn-to-quilt classes at a local fabric shop while still working full time. When I wanted a mental health break at work, I would look at local shops' websites for classes and dream of the time when I could take more of them. When retirement was on the horizon, I googled quilt guilds, and found York Heritage Quilters Guild, which met at a location not far from my home. I had no idea how big it was or exactly what would happen at a guild meeting, but I knew I would learn more about quilting and I would have the opportunity to work on charitable quilts. To me, the workshops offered by the guild have been a huge bonus—I've learned a lot. The main item being that there is so much more for me to learn!

While the pandemic has taken away our in-person workshops (hopefully for only a few more months!), it's also given us the opportunity to change our usual workshop schedule, so we can offer more workshops that are available to people who are working during the week.

I consider myself to be a beginner/intermediate quilter, so this year I'm taking some workshops that will push my quilting/piecing/art making boundaries. What workshops are you planning to take this year?

Happy quilting!
